3.2.1 Institution has created an ecosystem for innovations and has initiatives for creation and transfer of knowledge.

We believe that education does not happen only in the classroom. Architecture is a professional course and we believe that the students need to be given various avenues to learn.

We have created a Design Cell to promote the architectural design activities which also acts as an interface between the academia and profession. In PDEA architecture college series, we conduct sessions and other supporting topics.

Institute has created various avenues for transfer of knowledge for the students as well as faculty members. Knowledge is transferred through

Series of lectures by a faculty member in class room format with support of digital aids

One-on-one interaction takes place between the faculty and a student in a studio format, for specific creative inquiries

Students present their work of case studies or site visit reports in a presentation format individually or in a group for other students and the teachers

Design juries take place where a student explains his/her design to all the faculty members in the jury format

Subject specific films and videos are shown to the students followed by a discussion Practical on the field take place for the subjects like Surveying & Levelling, by taking instruments out in the field and making and documenting observations

Subject specific learning happens by visiting outside resources such as history museum or Plumbing lab in other institutes

Group discussions are encouraged before and during creative exercises

Seminar format is adopted for subjects like Contemporary Architecture Seminar

Computer lab is used for online learning, software use and making presentations

Knowledge about our own heritage is encouraged through heritage walks

Hands-on workshops help students to get practical knowledge of a particular skill

Market surveys help students get the knowledge of currently used materials and their quality and costing.
